FINE SESSION

The Most Successful in History of the Institutes.

EXCURSION TO BLACKSBURG

Demand One Hundred Thousand for Experiment Station at Blacksburg.

(Special from a Staff Correspondent.) ROANOKE, VA., July 18,-Five hundred farmers, many of them accompanied by their wives or daughters, faced ex-Governor Tyler, president of the State Parmers' Institute, when he called the second days' session to order at 9 o'clock this morning.

High water delayed some trains as much as ten hours, and many delegates who expected to reach here from the Southwest at an early hour last evening did not get in until 7 this morning, and some were even later. The con vention closed to-night with a session vention closed to-night with a session in the Y. M. C. A. assembly hall.

The members will go to Blacksburg to-morrow on a free excursion and inspect the equipment and the work of the Agricultural Experiment Station. This will take the greater part of the day. Luncheon will be served the visitors. Roanoke will be reached on the return at 7 o'clock, and the delegates will leave for their homes on the first trains.

The session of the convention has been the most largely attended and in every way the most successful in the history of the farmers of Virginia. Every section of the State was represented, and nearly every county had a delegate, many of them several.

The Southwest furnished the bulk of the representatives, of course, but the Southside, the Valley, Pledmont and Tidewaler each held a good delegation. The addresses were, with scarcely an exception, well suited to the audience. Practicability was a distinguishing characteristic of all of them. It would take a brave man to get up before such an assemblage of hard-headed farmers and weave finely spup theories into an address on any of the eminently practical subjects on man to get up before such an assemblage of hard-headed farmers and weave finely sput theories into an address on any of the eminently practical subjects on the programme. Of course, many of the addresses, especially those delivered by men in charge of the work at the agricultural experiment stations, were scientific, but the science talked by these men was science clothed in her simplest garb, and the wayfaring farmer had no trouble in understanding.

A farmers' institute such as this may be regarded as a farmers' school. That it would be impossible to find more earnest and apparently more progressive punils. The scientific farmers who are in charge of the work at the experiment stations are in every case practical farmers also, and the State institute is practically the only means the farmers of Virginia have of availing themselves of the results of the investigations and experiments of these gentlemen.

The Resolutions.

The Resolutions.

The Resolutions.

The convention elected officers to-day, but more important than this action was the adoption of resolutions declaring for State aid in inducing laborers to immigrate from Europe to Virginja, urging it is teaching of agriculture in the public schools, and declaring for an appropriation of a hundred thousand dollars for the development of the State College of Agriculture and Experiment Station at the Polytechnic Institute.

Attention is called to the success attained in Missouri, Georgia and other Southern States, with the heljer expressed that it can be successfully accomplished in Virginia.

The opinion of the association is tha made by the next Legislature for the development of the State College of Agriculture and Experiment Station, located at Blacksburg. Fifty thousand dollars of this will be required to complete and equip the agricultural hall now building, $10,000 a year for the additional maintenance and support of the Virginia experiment station, $15,000 for a stock judging pavilion; $5,000 for barns and roadways, and $10,000 for live stock, particularly horses. At the present time the facilities for obtaining an agricultural clueation in Virginia are not equal to riculture and Experiment Station, located clucation in Virginia are not equal to those enjoyed by students in other voca-tions, and the mere fact that those enjoyed by students in other vocations, and the mere fact that appropriations ranging from 110,000 to 130,000 have been made for the purpose in neighboring States shows how clearly the importance of agricultural education and the solution of the difficil problems which now confront the farmer are being appreciated.

State and national aid to road making was invoked in the resolutions, and the work of Prof. Andrew M. Soule and B. M. Williams, Assistant Secretary in the granization of the institute, was highly and the meeting adjourned until 1:30 o'clock this atternoon.

The addresses to-day and to-night excited universal comment by reason of their eminently practical character. The first one of the day was by Professor J. R. Fain, of the Experiment Station, who discussed raising boef cattle, with special reference to the character of food given the stock. He used charts to show what had been accomplished with different foods at Elacksburg, and this aid in imparting information, judging by the close attention it compelled, was most valuable.

At the afternoon session John F. Jackson, editor of the Southern Planter, made an address on sheep raising in Virginia, in which he showed that "there is money in it." The American people are eating more mutton every year, and spring lambs bring fabulous prices. Besides, there is a good profit from the sale of the wool. "Commercial Apple Growing in Virginia" was the tople discussed by Professor H. L. Price, of the experiment station. Professor R. H. Price discussed small canneries in Virginia and Professor H. L. dorsed the Torrens system, and expressing the hope that the Farmers' Institute will co-querate.

A resolution was offered regretting that the subject came before the body at such a late hour. The resolution was adopted without any further action.

The address was over and the convention had adjourned by 10 o'clock, which was rather late beditime for the farmers, even when they come to town. Besides, they have to be up early to-morrow for the train which is to take them to Blacksburg which leaves at 8 o'clock.

The discovery occurred because of putting a success of the money order desk as more discovery occurred because of putting a womar at the money order desk as more suitable work for her and placing Jenkins at another desk. So soon as he, began to explain the work to the woman clork, the irregularities were revealed, and Jenkins admitted that the accounts were in such a condition that even he did not understand them.

Inspector Bulla was called in and he determined that Jenkins had been using the government money to forward his own political ambitions. He wished to become paymaster in the army and he stood the civil service examination for that larger field of usofulness. The case is similar to that of Samuel L. Burroughs, who was dismissed as nextmaster of similar to that of Samuel L. Burroughs, who was dismissed as postmaster of Portsmouth three years ago for using $2,000 of the government money.
